Obiora found a creative way to leave his Laurentian legacy.

How will you leave yours?

"St. Lawrence is family" for Obiora Udechukwu, Charles A. Dana professor emeritus of art and art history. He is grateful to the University for giving him the opportunities to teach, to make art, and to make a difference during his 21 years at St. Lawrence. As both a 'thank you' and a way to help the next generation of students and faculty, Obiora made a legacy gift.

“

I hope faculty, alumni, and parents will join me and give back to the University. I know that no matter the size of the gift, the gesture makes a positive and meaningful impact on St. Lawrence.”

– Obiora Udechukwu

EVERY GIFT IS MEANINGFUL.

Few Laurentians knew it, but throughout his tenure on the faculty, Obiora was a loyal donor in support of the St Lawrence Fund, ODY Library, and other priorities. After retiring, Obiora found another way to give back to his community—through a life-income legacy gift. This is a way of giving to St. Lawrence that also provides a stream of income from the donation. Using cash, appreciated stock, and even IRA assets under the new Legacy Act, this type of gift decreases the donor's tax liabilities while helping to support St. Lawrence. So, everyone benefits.
